PATRICIA MAE WILLIAMS SCHOLARSHIP APPLICATION

Patricia Mae Williams began her career in 1973 as an Urban Planner for the Capitol Region Council of Governments and shortly after became the Director of City Planning for the City of Hartford; the first woman and minority in both positions. She would go on to become Deputy City Manager of Hartford. After retirement, Patricia led the relocation and re-development of the Dutch Point Colony Housing Project, one of many initiatives she worked on for the betterment of Hartford communities.

Patricia Williams' parents deeply believed that education and community involvement were the key to success for the African American Community, and they energetically stressed this to their seven children. Patricia stayed true to that belief system and throughout her life served in many organizations and initiatives throughout Hartford however, her passion was the Upper Albany Neighborhood. She loved community and dedicated her life to being the change that she wished to see in the community, the state, the world. This scholarship was set up in her memory to honor her dedication and commitment to educating our youth and the Upper Albany Community.
